

Glamping and Hideaways

Traveling greener and experiencing nature closer and more intensely, there are many ways. You can camp with the utmost comfort. Everything is possible, from sleeping in man-high barrels with a bed and side table to a spacious Bedouin tent with a luxury interior. We visited the Blixen family on the island of Funen, spent the night in Luxembourg on the Moselle in an old wine barrel and in Val Rovana in Ticino we dared to jump back in time and lived for several days in a 17th-century town house. The house stood empty for a whopping 100 years, was renovated for 10 years and now corresponds to the living standards of the 19th century - albeit before electrification.

In the Australian outback, accommodation in the middle of nature is a matter of course. Where should you go in these endless, almost uninhabited expanses. Bamurru Plains Lodge in the Northern Territories is one of the spectacular camps. With a lot of humor and Australian understatement, the luxury of running water and all the necessary sanitary facilities is staged here. The bedroom consists of walls that offer uninterrupted views of water buffalo and herons from the inside out. However, transparency and insights do not work from the outside in. Amazing!

Glamping and digital detox photos

Anyone who travels to a big city is not necessarily looking for nature as a special overnight destination. Nevertheless, cities are increasingly offering the opportunity to stay overnight in special places. Whether it's a former monastery or an industrial wasteland, the skilful combination of new and old and the new staging of old stock make some hotels so exciting that you almost forget to visit the city.

Deceleration and life like in another time

Digital detox and how long will it be light? Instead of simply flipping a switch, at Ca'Vegia in the small town of Cerentino in Ticino, it's better to always carry a box of matches with you. It is advisable to fill the candlesticks freshly in daylight and to get a jug of fresh water from outside. Where do I cool my drinks and how long do I need until the fire is burning and the copper cauldron is boiling? These are the questions you ask yourself when there is no electricity in the house. A very special kind of deceleration.
